

ELKAY® SENIOR MANAGEMENT CHANGES IN PLUMBING PRODUCTS DIVISION

Jim Scott, president of Elkay's Plumbing Product's Division (PPD), has announced his plan to retire from Elkay on January 1, 2008, after more than 30 years of service. Since joining Elkay in May 1974 as the administrative services manager, Scott has held many key executive positions including corporate vice president of administrative services and vice president of operations, prior to being named president of the PPD in January of 1999. In addition to managing the PPD, Scott also served on Elkay's Corporate Executive Council.

"Scott's leadership as president of the PPD has contributed to the growth and success of both the Division and the company overall," states Jack Edl, president and COO of Elkay Manufacturing Company. "Scott's achievements have been numerous and the impact of his leadership throughout his long career with Elkay has been remarkable," continues Edl.

Edl also announced the promotion of Steve Rogers as the new president of Elkay's PPD. Rogers joined Elkay in 2004, serving as the vice president of engineering for the PPD. Rogers will also become a member of Elkay's Corporate Executive Council and will report directly to Edl.

Since coming to Elkay, Rogers has been responsible for substantial innovations in manufacturing and engineering systems, as well as new product development. In addition, Rogers has played a key role in shaping the strategy and direction of the Division and has improved overall operational performance.

For more than 87 years, Elkay has been an innovative manufacturer of sinks, water coolers, drinking fountains and faucets for residential and commercial use.
