Revere® Offers Solutions for Selecting Quality Stainless Steel Sinks
Superior Service and Selection Make It Easy to Find the Right Model for Any Application

OAK BROOK, IL – May 2008 – Whether it be for a solid surface or stone countertop, most homeowners are opting for the universal style and high quality of stainless steel sinks. In fact, according to repair-home.com, stainless steel is by far the most popular sink material, occupying 57 percent of the American market. While homeowners may be confident in their material choice, they are often less certain about the shape, style and size of sink that will fit the needs of their home. Revere Sink, a leading manufacturer of stainless steel sinks, offers a wide selection of affordable, quality sinks and unrivaled customer service to help fabricators find the ideal model that meets the needs of each unique homeowner.

Undermount and Top-mount Models

Since Revere offers both undermount and top-mount sinks in a variety of styles, customers can find the right model for every application. While undermount models are more popular than top-mount for solid surface and stone counter tops, both sink types have unique advantages.

Undermount or recessed sinks, such as Revere's top-selling RCFU3118, RCFU3119 and RCFU3120 models, are installed under a countertop to create a seamless look with fluid, graceful lines. Since an undermount is a permanent installation, quality is key when selecting the sink as it typically cannot be removed after installation. These popular Revere undermount models are made of premium 18 gauge stainless steel for superior durability and offer complete sound and condensation protection. Revere applies special rubberized sound deadening pads as well as a full undercoating spray for a quieter washing experience.

In addition, Revere offers numerous top-mount or drop-in sinks, which have rolled and finished edges, in many standard sink base sizes that optimize an existing cut-out. Since drop-in sinks can be replaced without dismantling or possibly damaging the original countertop, remodeling is easier down the road. Also, with soft countertop stone such as marble, a top-mount sink can help protect the edges of the counter itself.

Style, Size and Depth

Revere offers a wide variety of sink styles, sizes and depths; however, finding the right model is a quick and easy process. Depending on the primary use of the sink, homeowners and fabricators can choose from single, double or triple bowl models in the ideal size and shape for each unique installation.

Revere's double bowl sinks, which offer two separate work compartments, increase efficiency for multiple users in the kitchen. Some double bowl models, including the RCFU3119 and RCFU3120, feature a second bowl in a different size or depth that can either be specified for the left or right side, depending on the customer's preference. Single bowl sinks can offer a more expansive work area for washing larger pots, pans and cooking sheets, while smaller single bowls, such as Revere's RCFU1618, can be used as a secondary preparation sink or a hospitality bowl in a bar area or kitchen island. Triple bowl models, which usually have two larger bowls with one small bowl in the center, provide versatility in the kitchen by offering enough space for several people to perform different tasks around the sink together.

Most residential sinks range from six to 10 inches in depth. As with the style, the depth should be determined by the homeowner's preference and the function of the sink. Revere also offers stainless steel sinks that have straight side walls and flat bottoms to
